Female American Eels spend years traversing the 3 000 miles from the site of their Atlantic Ocean inception to the freshwaters of Kansas Upon reaching the coast they leave their male counterparts behind and make the last leg of the journey alone Eventually swimming back they rendezvous with the males head out to sea spawn and die Although most fishes found in Kansas aren't as well traveled as the Eel some probably never venture more than a few thousand feet From the Back Cover Distributed by the University Press of Kansas Published by the University of Kansas Natural History Museum in cooperation with Western Resources the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks and the Kansas Biological Survey
